Please Update Your Farm Standard to Protect Chilean-Patagonia from Destructive Industrial Salmon Farms

The Aquaculture Stewardship Council (ASC) is failing to meet your self-described mission of promoting “environmental sustainability and social responsibility” in the seafood farming industry, “with care for people and the planet,” and “setting strict standards for seafood and farms [that] deliver high assurance throughout the supply chain.”

Farms that operate outside their allowed permits, falsify records, and/or operate in protected areas are getting certified every year by ASC. This should not be considered a responsible practice.

There has been explosive growth in the Chilean farm-raised salmon industry over the last thirty years as production has increased over 3,600% to more than 1 million tons annually -- making Chile the second largest producer of farm-raised salmon in the world. But environmentally destructive practices by many Chilean salmon aquaculture farms are proving disastrous for the unique Patagonia ecosystem.

Industrial waste from net-pen salmon aquaculture pollutes the coasts and alters the landscape. Pesticides and antibiotics, used to help control disease and pests like sea lice, leech into the environment and are harmful to many native species. 350 times more antibiotics are used in Chilean salmon farming compared to Norwegian salmon farming. Between 2004 and 2021, 8.5 million salmon escaped from production centers. Because salmon species are not native to the Southern Hemisphere, their escape has significant impacts on native fish populations and local ecosystems.

Most concerning is ASC’s certification of industrial-scale salmon aquaculture farms operating in nationally protected areas. A good case in point is ASC’s certification of 4 salmon farms owned by Nova Austral within Chilean-Patagonia’s Alberto de Agostini National Park, despite the company’s history of significant environmental violations. The company has been labeled as a “serial offender” by Chile’s Superintendency of the Environment (SMA), which in 2022, revoked permission for three of the company’s salmon farms operating within the park.

Unfortunately, Nova Austral is not an anomaly. In 2023, the SMA initiated sanctions processes towards 35 companies for non-compliance. Some of these farms were at the same time being certified under the ASC standard.

Shockingly, today's proposed ASC Farm Standard update would include a more permissive certification criteria that would allow farms in most protected area categories, including national parks. This could open the door to ASC-certified aquaculture in large portions of the world's marine protected areas and threaten global biodiversity.

It is clear that "sustainable" certifications like yours, as they currently stand, are not preventing Chilean industrial salmon farmers from causing environmental damage in protected areas. ASC is furthermore disregarding the defined goal of protected areas to preserve biodiversity and protect against industrial activities.

With the climate and biodiversity crisis ever present and a landmark United Nations agreement to protect 30% of the planet by 2030, we must maintain the integrity of protected areas.

We, the undersigned concerned organizations and individuals, urge ASC to:

- 1. Update your Farm Standard to make industrial salmon farms operating within protected area ineligible for certification and;
- 2. Decertify all existing industrial salmon farms currently operating in a protected area.
